Winchester Aug 22nd 1852.

Dear Garrison,

24 United as we are by a thousand ties in the great battle for the rights of humanity you will not wonder that a stranger thus [illegible] address you. Long have I admired your unfailing zeal and fearless action in behalf of freedom. Especially of late do I appreciate your independence in permitting the free discussion that is carried on through the columns of the Liberator. But to the point. The friends of reform in Indiana propose holding a Woman's Rights Convention at Richmond Wayne Co Ia on the 14th 15th of October and very greatly desire your presence and aid. Can you not come to the blighted land of Indiana and spend a while with us. We need assistance and there are a host of men in Mass that are able and willing to give us that aid if they could only be induced to leave their homes and travel west. There are many who would be glad to see you at the Convention this fall. We first desire your presence if you cannot come with us not write us an address and thus lend us your aid and influence—

Please let us hear from you soon

Yours for the right

B. F. Dixon
